GUILD

Introduction

This adventure is designed to be played as a one-off session. It could be used as a break from your regular campaign, giving your experienced players a chance to play around with some simpler, more expendable characters; or as an introduction to the basic gameplay of Dungeons & Dragons, perhaps for curious family members and friends.

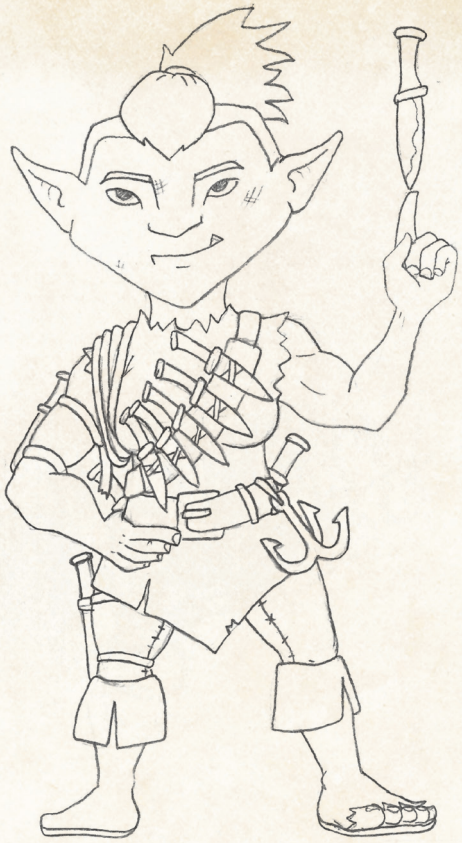

The goal of the adventure (steal elven gifts) as well as the obstacle (sleeping residents and watchful guards) are set up very quickly before players are dropped into an open-ended phase of the game. As the DM, it will be up to you to roll with whatever schemes your goblin-minded players concoct. Don't be afraid to go big with any consequences that might arise; this is a one-shot after all, so no-one's going to mind if half the village burns down.

The main measure of success for your players will be knowing just how much treasure they were able to steal. To this end, try awarding them something physical (chocolate coins are perfect) that they can hold onto. This has the added benefit of avoiding any downtime during play while players add treasure to their inventories.

When your session's alloted time draws near, the final phase of the session will disrupt whatever schemes are still running as an obvious 'boss-battle' opportunity presents itself. This is a great chance for the fractious goblins to come together and cooperate against a final challenge.

Once the final battle is over, the players will have a chance to recount some of their great deeds in character. Make sure everyone gets a say before announcing that the game has ended and thanking them for playing. Having this moment to reflect on highlights from the session will encourage players to continue talking about and sharing the experience even after it has formally ended.

Thank you for trying out A Very Goblin Giftsmas. I would love to hear how your sessions play out, and what schemes your PCs come up with. You can find me on Twitter @HighScoreKid

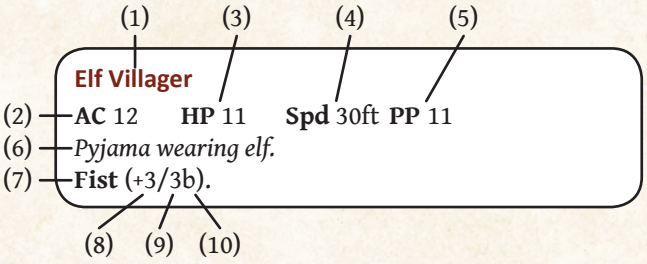

One Page Adventure

One of the goals of this adventure's design was to fit all the DM's information onto a single page in order to cut down on page-flipping and to keep focus on the action at the table. Naturally, this means that much of the adventure isn't as fleshed out as you might be used to seeing. DMs, being the infinitely creative souls that they are, will no doubt be able to fill in the blanks.

The Condensed Stat Block

Several of the basic enemies in the game have their combat statistics condensed down to save space. The elements of this stat block are as follows:

(1) Creature Name, (2) Armor Class, (3) Hit Points, (4) Speed, (5) Passive Perception, (6) Brief description, (7) Attack Name, (8) Bonus to hit, (9)Amount of damage, (10) Type of damage where b=bludgeoning, p=piercing, and s=slashing.

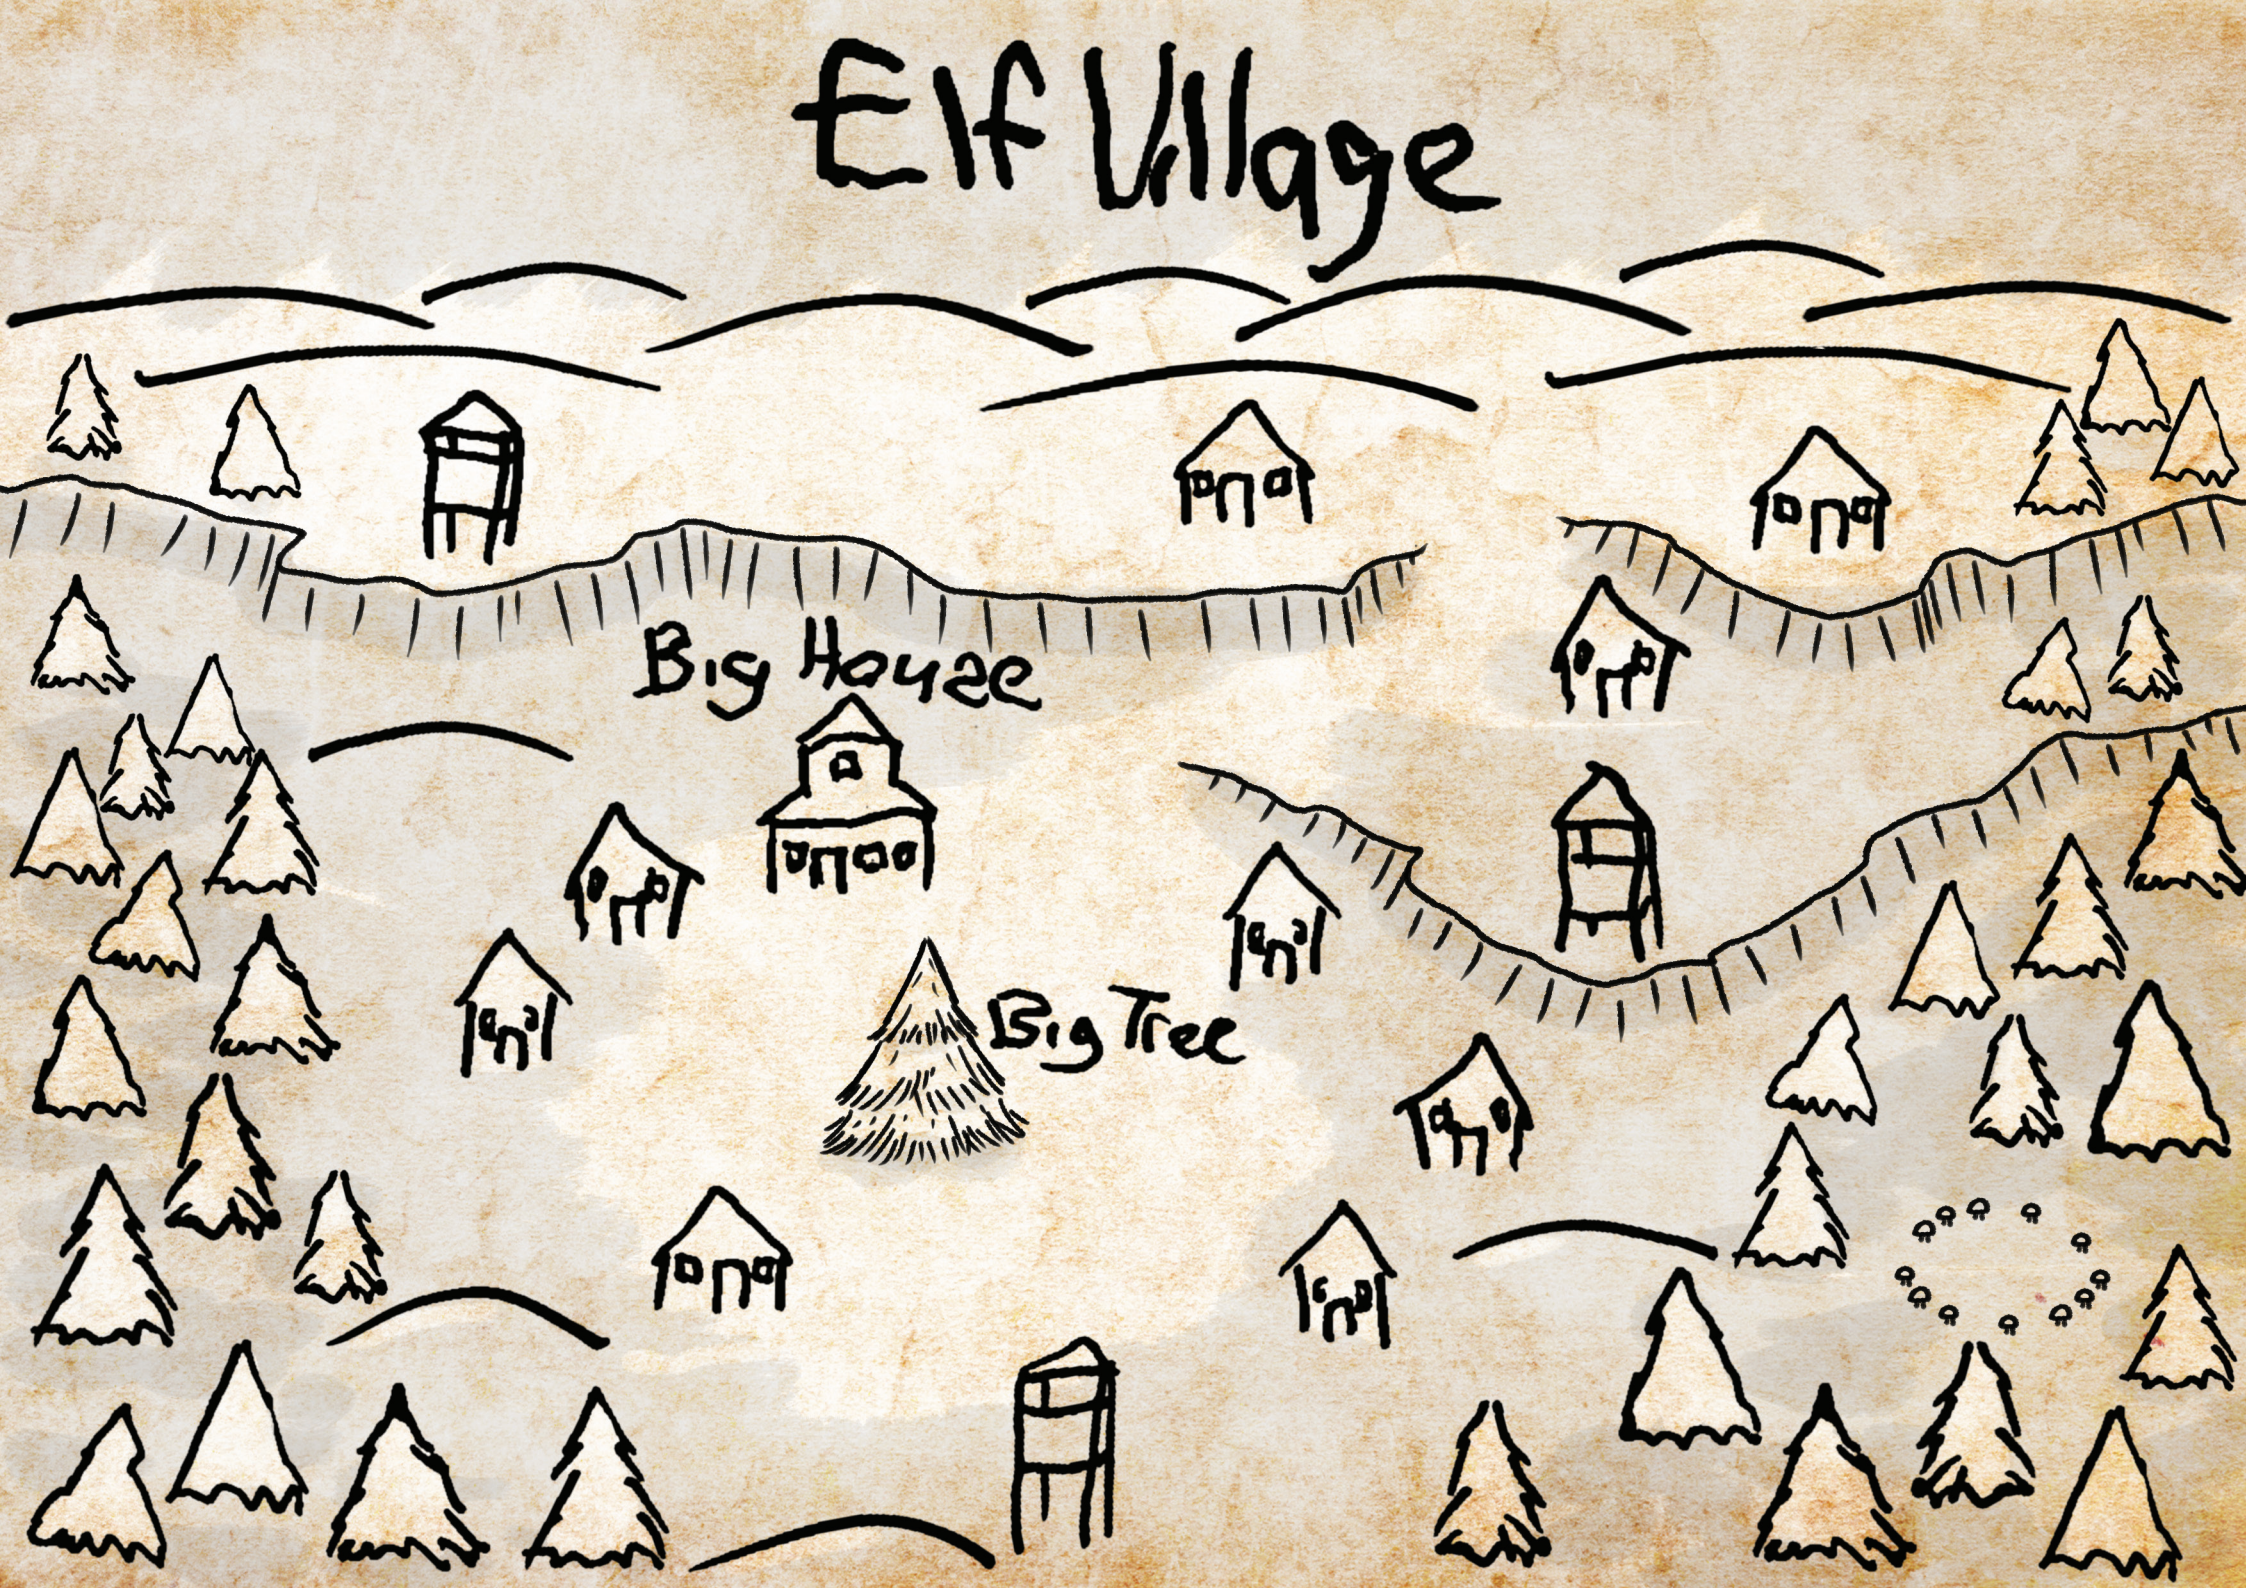

If you need to roll any ability checks for these creatures, either determine an appropriate DC or simply have them roll a D20, with a result of 13 or more being a success.

A Very Goblin Giftsmas

- Players choose a character sheet each.
- Randomly assign goblin names and keep them hidden for now.

It is the shortest day of the year and the forest is blanketed in thick white snow. As the sun sets, the Oozing Wound tribe gathers before its chief.

"My friends, it has come to my attention that the village of the Duskvale Elves lies ripe for raiding. Our scouts have informed me that the fey-folk have spent the entire day feasting and drinking and have fallen into a deep slumber. What's more, the scouts observed the elves exchanging a hoard of tiny chests, crates and boxes. No doubt full of elvish trinkets!"

The chief gestures towards the growing crowd, "Who among you is brave enough to join the raid?

"Tell us of a great deed you have performed and you shall earn your place."

- Players take turns introducing their character and creating a quick story of a great deed they have performed in the past.
- The Chief then sends them off to the raid.

PLAY IT OUT

Ignore initiative, cycle play around the table.

The village consists of three guard towers, 9 small houses and one large house. There are two Elf Guards in the large house and one in each tower. Each house hosts 2 Elf Villagers and 2 Elf Children (non-combatants) and has a pile of 1d8 gifts in the main room. The large house has a feasting hall still laid out with food, any goblin can scoff some food as an action and gain a one-time bonus of 10 temporary hit points.

Any elf who spots a lone goblin will move to engage, shouting to wake anyone nearby. An elf who sees more than one goblin will try to run to the large house and ring an alarm bell.

Once the alarm bell is rung, Elf Villagers will become Elf Militia and appear at a rate of 1d4-2 per round, moving towards the alarm.

A huge pine tree stands in the centre of the village and has 3d6 gifts beneath it.

On the outskirts of the village is a Dryad named Mistletoe who is deathly bored and wants to see some romance in exchange for a gift. If two goblins agree and kiss in front of her, Mistletoe says, "The greatest gift of all is love, may it warm your hearts for evermore." She then disappears with no further word. While the gift seems like a trick, the two participating goblins will automatically save against Klaus' slowing wind when he shows up later, as love keeps them warm.

- With one hour left, the Spirit of Winter, Klaus, arrives wherever the goblins are concentrated, alongside his two flying elk. He seeks to kidnap a number of them for his workshop but will flee if reduced below 20 hp.
- Any remaining goblins return to the village where the chief asks each player to recount something incredible they did during the raid.
