THE WITCHLIGHT

BEER FESTIVAL

The Witchlight Beer Festival can seamlessly integrate into your Witchlight campaign or any other campaign by tailoring it to fit your specific needs. I'll share how I incorporate the festival into my games, specifically placing it within the "Mystery Mine," an attraction at the Witchlight Carnival designed for 1st level characters. Feel free to adapt or disregard this background to suit your game – the choice is yours. You might find some ideas here that spark your imagination and enhance your gaming table experience.

The Witchlight Beer Festival can seamlessly integrate into your Witchlight campaign or any other campaign by tailoring it to fit your specific needs. I'll share how I incorporate the festival into my games, specifically placing it within the "Mystery Mine," an attraction at the Witchlight Carnival designed for 1st level characters. Feel free to adapt or disregard this background to suit your game – the choice is yours. You might find some ideas here that spark your imagination and enhance your gaming table experience.

The brothers' early indulgence in alcohol inevitably led to trouble. At one point, four of them almost faced imprisonment by a Harmonium Mercy Killer squad sent by the Lady of Pain herself. This predicament brought Mr. Witch and Mr. Light into the picture. Zenish had a longstanding positive relationship with the Witchlight Carnival, evidenced by his magical Witchlight hand tattoo shimmering with a pixie-dust-like aura. Utilizing deception and misdirection, the brothers lured the bounty hunters into the Witchlight Carnival, from which neither the hunters nor Zenish were seen again.

Now fugitives potentially facing the Lady of Pain's maze, the brothers and their mother found refuge with Mr. Witch and Mr. Light, who employed them to craft exquisite golden brews. It was from these initial Witchlight-crafted beers that a small beer garden blossomed, evolving into a festival where the brothers engaged in friendly drinking games and brewing contests. As they journey across various prime material crystal spheres, the brothers brew away their troubles.

The Witchlight Beer Festival By Numbers

To entice my players into the hidden Witchlight Carnival beer garden, I initiate the "MYSTERY MINE" encounter in the first chapter of "The Wild Beyond the Witchlight." If you, as the Dungeon Master, are eager to guide your players to the beer garden, you might introduce a rumor about free beer being offered at the Mystery Mine attraction. Zephixo, the Witchlight hand in charge of ticketing for the attraction, plays a pivotal role here. If players inquire about the free beer, Zephixo proposes a deal: they can enter the Mystery Mine without having their tickets punched, but only if they agree to peer into his "All-Seeing Eye" device.

Should a character choose to look into the "All-Seeing Eye," it triggers an illusion involving the creature they fear most, which then appears during the dragon encounter (instead of the dragon) detailed later in this text. If a PC looks into the eye, slip a pm or folded up piece of paper to your player asking them to write down\type what monster their PC fears the most. Either way the PC's will eventually decide to board the ride, with a maximum of two medium-sized characters per cart, you can advance the narrative by reading "Welcome To The Party" aloud to your players.

#0 Welcome To The Party!

> As the ride begins, a blend of stale ale and a faint hint of vomit wafts up from the floor of your carts. The carts start to rumble uncomfortably along the track, heading into the dragon-mouthed entrance of the Mystery Mine. One by one, each cart vanishes into the dimly lit cave. Then, in the blink of an eye, you find yourselves transported from your carts to an entirely different scene. It's as if you've stepped into a dream: you now stand in a bustling town square, teeming with commoners who are dancing, drinking, and reveling in celebration. This enchanting new place pulses with the sounds of bardic music and sparkles as if sprinkled with pixie dust.

BY THE HOLLOW

CARTOGRAPHER CASSASTEREO89

#1 Brewery

As you approach the lively festivities, you notice workers busily tending to a nearby brewery. They move with purpose, transporting keg barrels from a massive vat to a wagon nearby. One worker briefly pauses to give you a nod before resuming his duties. The scene unfolds into an avenue filled with celebration, marked by evident indulgence in drinking.

Present the map to the players. The laborers, while amiable, are keen to return to their tasks after sharing a slight smile. However, if questioned, they offer a word of caution before departing: they advise the party to steer clear of the dwarven spirits, warning, "That stuff will put you into next week!"

#2 Mithezisk Brandorbrook

Off in the corner of the festivities is a brawny man covered in white fur with the head of a horse! The hair upon his head is down to his shoulders and quite human like even though it is a myriad of different bright colors. He has a large yellow unicorn like horn in his mane that knocks into a barrel with each rep. You see, the unicorn man is currently laying with his back upon the ground while bench pressing a full barrel of ale! A swarm of lady pixies cheer him on and count out loud in high pitched voices with each rep. "5.....6.....7.....8!" and when the unicorn man gets to ten he sets the barrel off to the side, leaps up to his feet and flexes his muscles to the delight of his small audience.

Mithezisk offers up free mini pints of his latest concoction, a strong dark ale that leaves you with whiskey breath, he calls "Breakfast Beer". At all times the swarm of 7 pixie ladies flutter around him and giggle. Mithezisk does his best to win the parties vote over with his brew and for a full gold piece he will have a pixie sprinkle a bit of sparkling pixie dust into a fresh pint but will only offer up this delicacy to a party member who can lift a keg of ale over their head and win the pixies over. (Athletics DC 18).

If a player ingests the pixie dust breakfast beer they gain a flying speed of 30 feet for one minute. If effect ends while in mid flight the PC feather falls safely to the ground. If the PC attempts to fly off the map they will disappear into the fog and immediately reappear as they fly back into the festival through the main entrance (#0).

#3 Dorzes Brandorbrook

As you approach, you notice a rugged, bulky man behind the table, diligently wiping down tankards with a mostly clean rag. The air is filled with the scent of old, stale ale, intertwined with a sweet, candy-like aroma. "Care for a free taste?" he asks in a half-hearted grumble.

Dorzes carries a heavy heart, secretly in love with Glorianna, a half-elf maiden who travels with the festival. She captivates the drunk crowds with her music but remains oblivious to Dorzes's affection. Unfortunately for Dorzes, Glorianna has her eyes set on his brother, Mithezisk, the unicorn man, who merely sees her as a casual fling.

Dorzes's signature "Liquorice Root Ale" is a very dark black brew that absorbs rather than reflects light. Its taste, reminiscent of absinthe, is intense and not easily palatable for everyone. Despite this, Dorzes generously offers free samples to passersby. For those who acquire the taste, a full tankard is available for 3 copper pieces, and 5-liter mini kegs can be purchased for 3 silver pieces.

#4 Lamilda's Masks

Lamilda, an elderly woman with the vibrant attire of a belly dancer, dedicates much of her time to crafting ornate masquerade masks. She enjoys a close friendship with Silda, the benevolent matriarch of the beer festival, who has provided her with a space to showcase her artistic creations. Her masks, some adorned with small gemstones, vary in price from 1 to 500 gold pieces.

Recognizing the challenge of making a sustainable living from her art alone, Lamilda also sells fresh fish and exotic throw rugs with Eladrin designs from the Feywild. Her lively and engaging personality not only adds charm to her stall but also proves to be an effective tool in her salesmanship.

#5 Saniotaon Brandorbrook

As you near, the overpowering scent of strong alcohol fills the air. You see a plain-looking man in an apron, leaning against a massive barrel emblazoned with "Dwarven Spirits." The man, with greasy hair, greets you with a broad, drunken smile. "Well hello there!" he slurs, blinking rapidly through his foggy, bloodshot eyes. With a casual flick, he strikes flint and steel, igniting a liquor bottle like a torch. He skillfully flips the flaming bottle in the air, catching it deftly before casting you a sly smile. “Care to brave the perfect drink?”

Dwarven spirits is a potent, clear grain alcohol that burns fiercely on the way down, capable of felling a grown man in a single shot. A player character (PC) can safely consume a shot of the spirits for each point of their constitution bonus without making a constitution saving throw. For instance, if a PC has a constitution bonus of +1, they won’t need to make a CON SAVE DC 15 until after their second shot. Failing the save means the PC immediately succumbs to drunkenness, loses consciousness, and suffers the poisoned condition until they complete a long rest or are healed by magical means. This can be especially risky for a standing player, as they might collapse suddenly unless a quick-reacting companion is there to cushion their fall. Saniotaon, leveraging his charismatic personality, sells 1.75-liter bottles of his Dwarven Spirits for 10 gold pieces each, and offers a discounted case of six bottles for 50 gold pieces.

“The dwarven spirits scorch your senses like fire, blur your vision, and challenge your ability to keep your stomach contents in check.”

#6 Farmer’s Market

This tent is a haven for brewing enthusiasts, brimming with tables piled high with baskets of hops, barley, random grains and exotic fruits. These ingredients are essential for the brews concocted by the Brandorbrook brothers for the ongoing celebration. In addition to these raw materials, the market also offers a range of home brewing supplies, with a friendly merchant on hand to assist and answer any queries. “Well met and good day to you,” greets a black-furred cat person as you step inside.

The merchant, known as “Beans,” is keen on ensuring that no visitor leaves the market empty-handed. In fact, she offers every patron a complimentary half-pint of ale upon entry and another as they leave. Beans sets a fair price of 1 copper piece per pound for various hops and barley, and 2 copper pieces per pound for strains used in award-winning brews, such as Larth’s “Blonde Girl.” Additionally, brewing supplies are available here at a discounted rate of 11 gold pieces.

#7 Main Bar

At the bar, a lively crowd cheers on several women engaged in a spirited ale-drinking race. The chant of “Chug, chug, chug!” fills the air. As you draw closer to the bar, one of the contestants, mid-chug, passes out, tumbling off her stool to land prone at your feet!

The unconscious competitor, Sallyia, is a middle-aged human rogue with red hair, slim features, and, curiously, a real set of butterfly wings sprouting from her back. She snores loudly until someone comes to her aid. Thankfully, she hasn’t injured her head and regains consciousness if a party member or another patron successfully performs a DC 10 Medicine check.

As Sallyia finds her feet again, another contestant bows out of the competition, and a winner emerges: a slender, bearded female dwarf sporting a crooked eyepatch. Celebrating her victory, she lets out a belch and proposes a conga line, turning the bar patrons into a spontaneous dance mob. Energized by bardic music, they form a line and start a merry procession around the beer festival, even incorporating limbo into their revelry.

Larth Brandorbrook, the main bartender, is always ready to serve his specialty, “Blonde Girl” ale. He often quips that “it goes down as easy as a light beer”! Larth prefers brewing lighter ales, reasoning that customers can drink more compared to darker ales, thus potentially increasing sales at 2 copper pieces per tankard.

The brew-off ballot box is prominently located at the main bar. It’s a large, circular goldfish bowl where patrons slip in folded parchment pieces to cast their votes for the best beer of the Witchlight Beer Festival. Larth readily supplies parchment, ink, and quill to those who need them for voting.

#8 Fish n’ Grapes

As you explore further, you encounter a vendor whose stand is abundant with fresh fish and bushels of grapes. A cheerful gnome woman, dressed in bright tie-dye clothing, greets you warmly. With a friendly smile, she introduces herself as Banibelle, eagerly hoping to engage you in a transaction.

Fresh Trout: 2 copper pieces
Bushel of Grapes: 1 gold piece
Bottle of Wine “The Secret Stash”: 1 gold piece

#9 Mehkior Brandorbrook

You approach another vendor's table just as a thinly looking man throws an unconscious person up and onto the back of a nearby cow as if he were a simple cattle bag. It seems you are finally noticed as the man turns back to tend to his table and see's you standing there. "My friend here just lost a drinking contest. I'm just making sure he is safe and out of the way until he comes to. So how can I help you? Care to wager on a drinking contest yourselves?

If a drinking contest is at hand a round of betting is made. Afterwards, everyone drinking rolls 3 CON saves when they start slamming tankards of ale. Whoever rolls the most successful saves wins a point. And then another round of 3 CON saves are made. Whoever wins the most saves scores a point. The process is repeated until someone is declared the winner by scoring 2 points. No points are scored on a draw. The winner of the drinking contest wins the coin that was bet as well as a Witchlight Beer Festival tankard with their name engraved on it.

Mehkior's personally crafted ales are made with exotic sugars that can be found all throughout the Feywild! Sweet and easy, a tankard is usually gone in three blinks of an eye. Today's entry into the competition is a pale cane sugar honey ale he calls "Honey White". (2 cp\pint) (3 gp\full keg)

#10 Mem Brandorbrook

At his booth, you see a large man with a bald head and a substantial beer belly, tidying up after the last drinking contest. As you approach, he eyes you seriously before breaking into a smile. "Well met, strangers! Are you here to test your mettle in the ale-drinking competition, or are you just here for a tasting?"

Mem's humor is straightforward, sometimes dark, but he's essentially a kind-hearted man who enjoys entertaining patrons with a few coins to spare. His entry in the current competition, "Mem's Pride," is the darkest and heaviest of all, topped with a thick marshmallow-like foam. This renowned brew has claimed victory in the Witchlight Beer Festival brew-off on multiple prime material worlds, including an impressive win 8 years ago on Oerth! A tankard of "Mem's Pride" is priced at one silver piece, and 144 oz mini kegs are available for one gold piece.

Should a drinking contest arise, bets are placed first. Then, participants engage in a series of Constitution saving throws. Each contestant makes three Con saves as they chug their tankards of ale. Each set of successful saves earns a point. The contest continues with additional rounds of three Con saves each, accumulating points. The winner is declared upon scoring 2 points, and no points are awarded in the event of a draw.

#11 Silda Brandorbrook

Upon your arrival, a remarkably youthful elderly lady in flowing attire welcomes you with a heartwarming smile that conjures the comfort of home. She has long salt-and-pepper hair draped over her shoulders, and her demeanor has the soothing effect of sitting by a cozy hearth. Her tables are laden with teddy bears and baby dolls, surrounded by the exotic scents wafting from the nearby hookah lounge. "I'm Silda!" she announces with evident joy at the prospect of new customers. "Feel free to browse. Each doll here is unique, handcrafted by me. If you have any questions, don't hesitate to ask."

Silda is eager to answer any queries and enjoys engaging in conversations to make new acquaintances. If the characters are less conversational, she politely retreats to her sewing table under the small canopy behind her stall, continuing her work on her next creation. While Silda remains discreet about her family's true history, she is an open book on all other topics, except for the "dragon encounter" if the players have not yet experienced it. If the players have already faced the dragon, Silda greets them warmly, as old friends, insisting they choose a doll of their liking as a keepsake for their children upon their return from the carnival.

Teddy Bear: 5 silver pieces
Custom Teddy Bear: 2 gold pieces
Baby Doll: 5 silver pieces
Custom Baby Doll: 2 gold pieces

#12 Feywild Hookah Lounge

Contrary to its name, the Feywild Hookah Lounge is not located in the Feywild, but is instead a masterful illusion created within a tent by Silda, affectionately known as "the beer fest mother." The interior is magically transformed to appear as if it's part of the Feywild itself!

As you enter, pixies flit about the brightly colored canopy, giggling at newcomers. Passing through the tent flaps, you're enveloped by a cloud of pixie dust-like glitter, overwhelming your senses. Dazzling colors surround you. For a moment, you feel disoriented, weightless, floating in a shimmering, endless void.

This bewildering experience quickly fades, revealing a new environment entirely. You find yourself in a swampy island lounge under a twilight-pink sky, surrounded by exotic velvet chairs and couches circling a large bonfire. Luminescent butterflies flutter like fireflies, and an elf maiden dances gracefully around the fire, her harp music blending seamlessly with the natural sounds of nearby rivers and forests. Patrons lounge comfortably, engrossed in their hookahs, while a trio of goblins gives you a brief, suspicious glance before resuming their conversation.

Silda has artfully employed the spell 'hallucinatory terrain' inside the lounge, along with several permanent 'minor illusion' spells and 'thaumaturgy' cantrips at the entrance, to deceive festival goers. The tent is also imbued with strong transmutation magic, similar to Daern's Instant Fortress (DMG pg 160). Players testing the illusion's boundaries by moving beyond the ring of couches will abruptly encounter the physical interior walls of the tent.

The lounge serves as a sandbox for relaxation and leisure. The characters are offered pipe weed from one of the goblins (1 gold piece per ounce) and if they eavesdrop on their conversation, they might overhear the goblins plotting to ambush a unicorn and saw off its horn!

#13 The Main Stage

> At the main stage, a spirited bardic troupe captivates the audience with their dance and song, creating a mystical atmosphere. As you approach, a pale elf woman in a tight black dress and choker collar is taking a vocal solo. The audience erupts in cheers for "Glorianna! Glorianna!" making it clear she's the crowd favorite. Directly opposite the stage, a pig roast draws a queue of hungry patrons.

After finishing her solo, Glorianna gracefully interacts with several drunken admirers who approach the stage, flowers in hand. She shares a moment with her fans before the band transitions to the next number. The troupe is open to guest musicians, offering a chance to join them onstage during their break. Meanwhile, anyone is welcome to try and play along with the band (DC 11 Performance).

A notable moment occurs if Dorzes Brandorbrook comes to watch Glorianna perform. She reacts dramatically between songs, accusing him of being a "stalker" and storming off stage. She refuses to continue performing until he leaves the area.

#14 Grorkun Brandorbrook

> As you pass by, a bald man with a significant beer belly and a shiny head gives you a friendly nod. Nearby, a commotion erupts at a table where a group of rabbit-like people are animatedly reacting to the results of a dice game. The burly man's face lights up with a huge smile. "Hey, you there. How about a free pint of ale?"

Should the characters accept, they are promptly served a beverage that, while light and smooth, tastes noticeably watery. This is Grorkun's "Gotcha Drink." He dilutes Larth's "Blonde Girl" just enough to encourage patrons to linger longer at his gambling tables. Grorkun isn't interested in brewing fame; his focus is on drawing people to his dice games. He introduces himself to the party and inquires if they're familiar with Baldur's Bones. Amidst quick jokes and hearty laughter, Grorkun explains the rules.

Baldur's Bones is a game akin to blackjack but played with dice. Each player rolls 3d6 and can choose to take additional "hits" (extra dice rolls) until they decide to stop. The goal is to avoid going over a total of 21. The objective is to beat the dealer's score. Winning the game means doubling the coins wagered for the ante.

#15 Picnic Area

> In the center of the festival is a wide open area filled with tables upon which dozens of festival goers enjoy delicious food from the pig roast. Along with the music that comes from the comfort of the band off to the south upon the main stage, several children run by you as they race around the area engrossed in a game of tag. As they do so they sing aloud with the singer on stage as they play. The rest of the atmosphere is just as delightful. This looks like a great place to relax.

Jurin Grounin and his wife Maggie tend the roast and are more than happy to fix up a plate for anyone that's hungry and has an extra piece of silver to spare. The pair of life mated owlins are always extremely friendly and graciously accept tips.

Pulled Pork Platter w\ Carrots and Potatoes = 1 Sp

Dragon Encounter

When the time is right for the epic finale, if one or more of the PC's stated their greatest fear before the All-Seeing Eye go ahead and improv a dramatic entrance as illusions of said creature(s) appear in the beer garden to create chaos among the patrons. These illusions disappear after being hit three times with any form of attack.

If none of the PC's elected to speak to the All-Seeing Eye they are suddenly startled by a dramatic and epic disturbance. An immense illusion of an adult red dragon emerges from the surrounding fog, landing with a thunderous impact on a nearby rooftop. The dragon unleashes torrents of fake flames upon the fleeing patrons, creating a terrifyingly realistic scene for the PCs, at least initially.

The DM should gauge the group's engagement after they have visited a few vendors and sampled beverages. If the players are actively enjoying role-playing and exploring, allow them more time to experience the festival. However, if there's a sense of anticipation for action, it might be the right moment to initiate the dragon encounter.

You're reveling in the beer garden, surrounded by friends, jubilant music, and lively drinking contests, when suddenly a fearsome roar cuts through the festive air. A large, dark shadow moves ominously through the fog overhead, sending a wave of unease through the crowd. Then, a massive red-scaled dragon bursts forth from the low-hanging clouds, perching atop a building and drawing a deep breath, preparing to unleash fire. The festival erupts into chaos, resembling a disturbed anthill. This is the cue for everyone to roll initiative.

As the encounter unfolds, have the players roll initiative and follow the turn order. With each completed round, an illusion of a creature feared by one of the PCs, as previously stated into Zephixo's "All-Seeing Eye Contraption," materializes to join the dragon. If no fears were disclosed, only the dragon appears. The illusions have an AC of 12, Initiative +0, and on each of their turns, the dragon uses its illusory breath weapon (Dex Save DC 15). A failed save results in the flames harmlessly washing over the target, causing no actual damage. The illusionary creatures have an attack bonus of +5 but deal no damage on a hit as their attacks pass right through their targets like a ghost. Despite attacks seemingly passing through the dragon and other illusions, the illusions dissipate after three successful hits. If a PC succeeds on an Arcana check (DC 13) during the encounter, they realize the creatures are merely illusions. Any beer festivals patrons that get caught up in the harmless flames are actually illusions there to set the stage. No actual man, woman, or child gets injured during the chaos for it is all staged.

The atmosphere rapidly transforms from chaos to jubilation as the festival attendees give three hearty cheers to the heroes for their valiant "defeat" of the dragon! For the rest of the celebration, the player characters (PCs) are lauded like renowned bards. The enthusiastic audience insists on them taking the stage for a musical performance. Each party member should make a Performance check (DC 12). If at least half of the party succeeds, they surprisingly deliver a respectable performance. Even in the case of failure, the crowd continues to support them with fervent cheers.

The excitement escalates when a unicorn emerges from a burst of fog, a trophy dangling from its horn. The trophy, a brass cup, quickly becomes a cherished vessel, constantly refilled with beer by the festival-goers. However, as the unicorn presents the trophy, a group of goblins ambushes the creature, attempting to saw off its horn. The number of goblins matches the number of PCs in the group.

After dealing with the assailants, the celebration resumes unabated with music, dancing, beer, and a conga line. The usual voting for the best beer is bypassed as the PCs are once again brought onstage to announce their own personal favorite brew of the festival. The beer that they collectively choose wins, and its brewer is honored as the brew master. The victorious brewer steps forward to receive a decorative wreath with a central plaque, which Silda prepares to hand over for the presentation. The party at the Witchlight Beer Festival continues into the evening, under a perpetually foggy twilight sky that radiates nothing but delight.

When the party concludes, and the heroes can no longer stand from the festivities, they decide to leave the festival. In a delightful send-off, they are crowd-surfed through the mist (#0) and then find themselves back in a mining cart. The cart rattles down the track, exiting the cave, and returns them to where their adventure began: the Mystery Mine attraction within the Witchlight Carnival.

The Brandorbrook Brothers

Grorkun, Age 50, CG, Fighter 4: A burly, beer-bellied man with a bald head and a jovial laugh. A better strategy than selling, Grorkun generously offers new patrons a free drink when they play at his gambling tables, enthusiastically promoting his dice games to festival attendees.

Mem, Age 47, N, Fighter 3: Like his older brother, Mem sports a massive beer belly and is almost as bald. He has the darkest personality among the Brandorbrook brothers. His indifferent humor keeps beer enthusiasts returning to his booth for more drinking contests.

Larth, Age 45, CG, Fighter 2: The youngest and leanest of the brothers, Larth is clean-cut and slightly sickly in appearance compared to his siblings. He often wins the Witchlight Beer Festival Brew Master award and is usually found at the main bar, hosting drinking contests with his latest winning brew.

Saniotaon, Age 43, CG, Fighter 3: Although the most average-looking of the brothers, Saniotaon's spirits are exceptionally potent. As his father's favorite, he was secretly taught the art of distilling Dwarven Spirits from a young age.

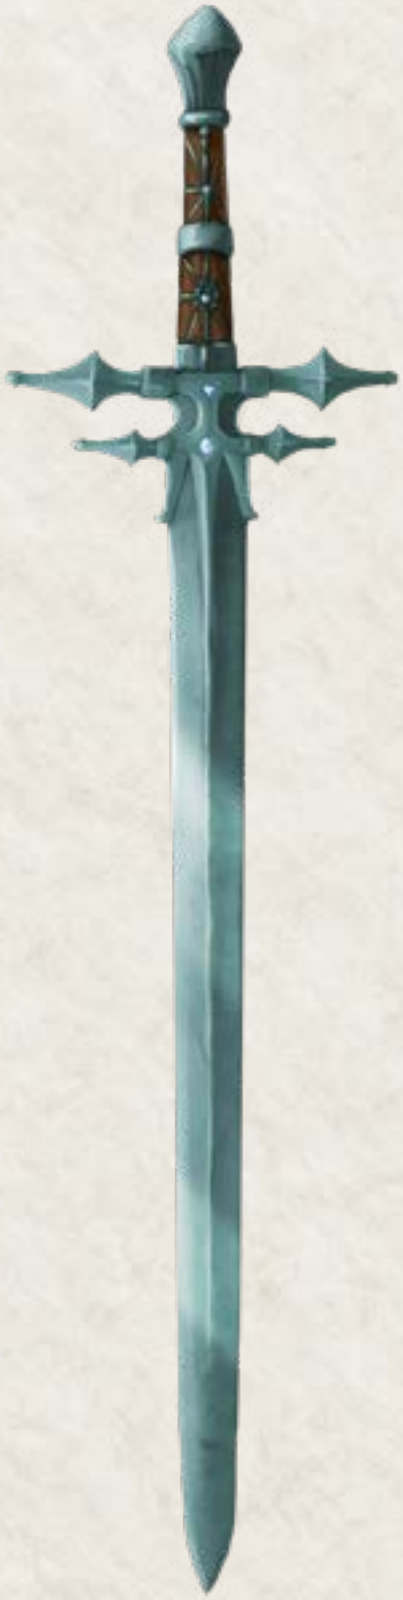

Mehkior, Age 41, LG, Fighter 2: Athletic for his age, Mehkior specializes in crafting sweet brews, incorporating sugars from around the Feywild into his recipes.

Mithezisk, Age 39, NG, Fighter 2: The most physically fit and muscular of the brothers, Mithezisk often boasts about his strength with phrases like, "Do you even lift, bro?" He is a crowd favorite, not just for his presence but also because he is half man/half unicorn due to a botched deal with an archfey.

Dorzes, Age 37, CG, Fighter 2: Another burly brother, Dorzes is known for his exceptional liquorice root ales. He often embarrasses himself in attempts to impress his love interest, Glorianna, a bard who travels with the festival.

Silda, 70, LG, Wiz 8: Silda, the benevolent mother of the Brandorbrook brothers, is the supportive pillar of the Witchlight Beer Festival. Despite her age, she appears remarkably youthful and is involved in various aspects of the festival, including orchestrating "the grand illusion." After befriending a unicorn that wandered into the beer garden from the Feywild, she learned to cast a variety of illusion spells and became adept at spellcraft. With long salt-and-pepper hair, she often receives drink offers from unsuspecting patrons, to which she giggles and declines, saying she doesn't drink. Silda can typically be found at her booth, selling handmade teddy bears and baby dolls crafted from traditional hemp fibers. She seldom displays her powerful staff, reserved for summoning the dragon and other illusions.

Brew Master Brew Off Entries

Mithezisk's "Breakfast Beer"
a strong dark ale that leaves you with whiskey breath.

Dorze's "Liquorice Root Ale" is very dark, nearly black, and hardly catches any light that passes through it. It goes down like absinthe on the palate and is an acquired taste.

Saniotaon's "Dwarven Spirits" is a clear grain alcohol that burns like fire going down and has the power to drop a grown man to the ground in one shot.

Larth's "Blonde Girl" is a blonde ale that's as easy as a light beer.

Mehkior's "Honey White" is a pale Feywild cane sugar honey ale.

Mem's "Mem's Pride" is a very dark and heavy ale with a thick head of marshmellow foam.

Grorkun's "Gotcha Drink" is a watered down version of Larth's "Blonde Girl".

About The Author

THE HOLLOW

I've been hosting regular weekly games with great success since 1993 back when I started DMing at my 7th grade school lunch table full of friends.. I remember recruiting players out of The Red Dragon Inn on AOL for impromptu instant messenger Dragonlance games back in the day. I am 42 years old now and I have never really NOT been a DM of a D&D group pretty much my entire life. I am a forever DM and I've been doing it for weed\beer money on Roll20 for over 6 years now! As a community service I admin some of the largest dungeon master help groups on facebook. I still know how to use THAC0. In my opinion, 3.5 is NOT the greatest edition. I'm ultimately a chill dude. When not doing the D&D thing I'm a rock n roll union musician and I've donated years of my life helping out schools with computer network issues. Let's roll some dice and spin some records :)

HMU and hire me to DM for you :)

https://www.facebook.com/TheHollowsDnDStudio

Cartography

CASSASTEREO'S MAPPERIE

Luca, aka "Cassastereo"
I live in Italy and i love Rpgs. Since i started DMing I've been fascinated by the idea of creating visual aids for my players and, during the past couple of years, I managed to craft quite a few maps.

https://www.patreon.com/cassastereo

Extra special thank you to WOTC ROLL20 & DMSGUILD

Shout out to the playtesters who helped make this possible :)

Visit The Hollow's DM Help Groups

The Wild Beyond the Witchlight DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/331880628313113

Dragonlance 5e SotDQ DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/dragonlanceshadowofthedragonqueendms

Phandelver & Beyond DM Group

www.facebook.com/groups/phandelverandbelowtheshatteredobelisk/

Frostmaiden DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/214015769557965

Baldurs Gate Avernus DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/362139524408865

Waterdeep DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/919429914910655

Candlekeep DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/1112083339234082

Strixhaven DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/strixhaven/

Critical Role Call of the Netherdeep DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/callofthenetherdeep

Keys from the Golden Vault

https://www.facebook.com/groups/keysfromthegoldenvault

Planescape 5e AttMM DM Group

https://www.facebook.com/groups/planescapeadventuresinthemultiverse

SPECIAL THANKS
Nathenael Roux
https://www.barkalotdesigns.com
EXTRA SPECIAL THANKS
Everyone on The Hollow's D&D Studio Discord Server
SUPER EXTRA SPECIAL THANKS
All the DM's in The Wild Beyond the Witchlight DM's group on facebook